Horrors! Red Faber has been shot. No, not the famous "Red" of the White Sox team, but still the property of Chas. Comiskey. This particular Faber happens to be one of the Old Roman's prize herd of moose. It was shot and killed at Trude Lake, Wis., by a farmer boy.

About the only wrestling that is done nowadays is in throwing the bull. Under those circumstances the wrestling game is far from dead.

If you go to that threatened battle in New Mexico between Charley White and Freddie Welsh you had better plan on spending a week or so. A 99-round fight is talked of.

Get out your muffler, your flying ribbons, your pennant and your husky voice, folks. Football has come.

One of the main indoor sports of the day is selling world's series tickets and then recalling them. Managers shouldn't count their chickens until they are hatched.

Wonder if Connie Mack sold any?

COMISKEY WON'T TALK CITY SERIES YET AWHILE

We would like very much to give local ball fans some dope about the probable city series between the White Sox and the Cubs. But it can't be done. Principally because Charles Comiskey refuses absolutely to discuss any city series until the world's series possibilities are dead and buried in the hands of the Boston Red Sox. Comiskey's silence is the best indication that the Old Roman still has hopes of his South Side crew landing the American league bunting. "Boston isn't the winner yet," he says, "and we are going right along. If Boston slips with New York and then the Phillies trim 'em, look out for the White Sox. We will take care of ourselves in the remaining games to be played with Cleveland."

Now for the IF column dope. If the White Sox take four contests from Cleveland and IF the Yankees take two of their four games with Boston and the Phillies grab two out of the three games with Boston, then the White Sox and Red Sox will be tied. The race in that event would end as follows:

	Won.	Lost.	Pct.
White Sox	90	64	.584
Red Sox	90	64	.584

That would probably result in a game between the two teams, the winner taking the flag. Chicago's hopes are slight, but with Philadelphia going along at a good clip and the Yankees doing the same—well, you never can tell.

It might be mentioned that the Cubs have nothing along this line to prevent them talking city series.

You seldom hear of a pitcher actually winning his own game. Yet that is just what Jeff Pfeffer, pitching for Brooklyn against the Cubs, did yesterday. In the fifth inning, with two
